Comparative Law

Pierre Legrand

Abstract

Following upon some preliminaries, this course is structured around three key problematics.

Firstly, the course addresses the place of foreign law on the U.S. legal scene against the background of “glocalization” through two case-studies [SECTION I]. While foreign circumstances are more present than ever in cases coming before U.S. appellate courts on account of increasing economic, political, and institutional interdependence on the world stage, there is strong resistance, cutting across conservative/liberal lines, on the part of many U.S. judges, commentators, and legislative assemblies to the practice of U.S. cross-references to foreign law. What must be the normative reach of foreign law in the United States? Arguments from constitutionalism and democracy are examples of the claims that will be canvassed.

Secondly, the course considers various interpretive hurdles necessarily arising from any U.S. legal interaction with foreign law [SECTIONS II-VI]. How much understanding of foreign law must a U.S. lawmaker, judge, teacher, or lawyer achieve before advertence to it becomes legitimate? For example, how “cultural” must U.S. legal analysis of foreign law make itself in order to prove creditable? Can U.S. understanding of foreign law ever manage to avoid ethnocentric bias? Is the fact that foreign law exists in a foreign language an obstacle to meaningful U.S. knowledge? Are there methodological keys that can optimize the acquisition of foreign knowledge? Such questions will be approached from an “interdisciplinary” perspective.

Thirdly, the course investigates selected topics allowing for practical and in-depth familiarization with the difficulties and opportunities attendant upon the interplay between U.S. and foreign law [SECTION VII]. In particular, the treatment of privacy laws in Europe and in the United States will be examined.

Learning Objectives

The principal aims of this course are to:

- Understand and critically assess the rationales underlying comparative interventions in law.
- Understand and critically assess the salient theoretical pitfalls attendant upon the comparison of laws.
- Understand and critically assess the protocolar choices required to be made by comparativists.
- Understand and critically assess the principal ideologies and discourses within the field of comparative law.
- Conduct critical comparative research about law.

Attendance Policy

Attendance is expected in all scheduled classes. Not only do the American Bar Association and the University of San Diego require attendance, but your presence in class is deemed important to your overall understanding of the material. You may therefore miss no more than two (2) meetings. After you have missed two (2) meetings, the instructor will send you a written notice in line with institutional regulations. If you then miss a third meeting, the instructor reserves the discretion to require you to prepare and submit a written or oral report on a subject related to this course, or lower your final grade, or withdraw you from the course. The instructor reserves the discretion to count a late arrival to class or an early departure from class as an absence.

Assessment

The assessment will take the form of a final “take-home” examination worth 100% of the grade. This examination will last three (3) hours and consist of one (1) question. The question will be sent to you electronically via e-mail at the set time. Your answer must be typed and sent electronically via e-mail by the set time. Your typescript should number approximately seven (7) to eight (8) pages of double-spaced text in twelve-point (12-point) typeface within the usual margins. Your typescript must feature a reasonable number of references to class materials. If you so wish, you may also mention other documentation. References can be included in the body of the text or presented by way of footnotes or endnotes. You need not follow any particular citation model. You may refer to your classnotes (with an indication of the relevant date, if possible). Typescripts that fail to meet the requirements or that are submitted late will be penalized at the instructor’s discretion. The final “take-home” examination will take place on Saturday, 29 June 2019 in the morning.
